The event falls at the same time as Apple’s annual WWDC. It’s also right around the time that Apple will announce its new iPhone 4S (and accompanying iOS 5). The two companies will in many ways be competing for the same consumers’ dollars, though Google has something that Apple does not (yet): a retail presence. As far back as October of last year, Apple began investigating a potential purchase of Best Buy’s Geek Squad subsidiary. The most recent move, however, would seem to indicate that Apple’s true interest in Geek Squad is not so much to complement its mobile devices (although they certainly play into that) but to acquire a highly-respected brand with a large customer base that it can integrate into its iOS ecosystem. Following the iPhone 4S announcement, Best Buy announced that it had acquired Geek Squad and would be spinning it off to become its own company. The acquisition, which seems to lack the fanfare that Best Buy originally expected, won’t have any effect on the current retail strategy that Apple and Best Buy are pursuing. It’s a smart move on Apple’s part, though it may also prove to be unfortunate for Geek Squad’s franchise stores. With 600 stores on the books, the brand is currently in the midst of a significant expansion, and its very inclusion in the Best Buy fold may limit the company’s ability to continue that growth — even if Best Buy is quite willing to help finance that growth. As part of the expansion, Geek Squad locations are being upgraded to Best Buy’s in-store brand: Innovative Geek Squad, and the company’s 1cb139a0ed
